TIME & TIDE

The world changes constantly. We cannot witness the entire cycle of evolution because our life time is infinitesimal compared to the life time of our planet. Despite the small amount of time we spend on our planet we can experience changes resulting from our planet's journey through time and space. The sun moves through the sky, the water rises and falls through the tides. Like King Canute, we command neither time nor tide and so we must live with the constant change and adapt our lives to the rhythm of the planet.

As we progress through our life on this planet we too change, physically, mentally, and emotionally. We crave the illusion of stability while the planet constantly changes around us. On rare occasions our changing lives and the changing planet converge upon a place that for a short period of time is gently touched by the forces of nature. A little spot on the planet where for a fraction of a second time, tide, and man converge and the constant change of the planet is recorded through photography.
