Patience is a Virtue

We wait and bide our time for the proper moment. We use the time to think, plan and enjoy anticipating the arrival of that special time. Waiting for a special event gives us time visualize the result of our work. We surmise, we ponder and deep down inside we fear we have overlooked the obvious thing that will make our “best laid plans, gang aft agley.” What else could we do to insure success at the proper moment? We won’t know until that proper moment presents itself. When the singular event arrives, we spring into action.

On a summer morning the sun casts its light in a special way on a certain place. The wait is over.
